

SUSAN BALL

University of Paris 8 - "Department of English"

Senior lecturer

ACADEMIC CAREER

After completing her doctorate in land use planning, she worked as an analyst in the UK real estate market. She currently teaches English for geographers, and contemporary British culture at the University of Paris 8, where she is a member of the research group EA1569 Transferts critiques et dynamiques des savoirs. She has published on migration and divided societies, visual sources, and land and property development. This work reflects her interdisciplinary approach to research. She is currently researching the valorisation of work-based knowledge and the development of property research in the UK.
